It's Green Season Again

Rainy, cloudy, foggy days.... a love-hate relationship. One definitely gets tired of it- clothes don't dry, molds full-force, landslides, and flooding struggles. But it is so nice to see green again, have plenty of water, better electricity, and ensure enough for the needed crops. Early on there was bad flooding in the East and countries to the east. Now areas west of us have also been struggling. So far it seems only the normal amount of disasters that monsoons always brings. While none would be the best, here's hoping it won't get worse this season. Still almost 2 months to go, so we'll see....

Enjoying teaching and sharing in their lives

The whole gang the final day of teaching

I really enjoyed the opportunity to teach for a week at the DTS training in the area. Preparation (a new subject for me) took a lot of time, but was also enjoyable as I got to be reminded of all of Father's great attributes and work on how to best communicate this in the local language. A real challenge in getting it across with the wide variety of students from 6 different districts. Here's the role call:

- 1 local young man raised in a Family home who just finished 10th class
- 1 15 year old from "back-slidden" family and very remote area, but totally on-fire to learn.
- 2 sent away to a 'family' school in India at young age, educated in Hindi, living in a hostel, seldom visiting home, and just now returned for good. One struggled with even communicating in our language and is actually barely able to read and write. Neither of their families have stood firm in their remote village areas.
- 1 17 year old girl who dropped out of school in 4th grade to go into the city to work. She has finally returned to her own home, wants to be able to return to studying as well as "serve"
- 2 sister-in-laws in early 20's who have only been about 3 years in the family. The one's husband became a drug addict and has disappeared/abandoned her and her 2 children.
- 1 young man with a back-ground of drugs/alcohol and evil spirits, came after only one month of being "freed" and believing. The book is totally new to him, and he is still struggling with spiritual issues.

Whew... plenty of challenges for these young folks, as well as for those doing the shepherding during this 3 month training.

Waiting for my motorbike ride up to the training, so decided to let you see the morning "traffic" going by near my house. It's rough and unedited, but if you want to get a feel....

I'm thankful to be seeing improving health. My GI issues are doing really well, and I'm gradually getting braver with what I eat again. I do still have a ways to go yet with strength, energy, and stamina. Hopefully time will still bring that about. I was asked to join in a meeting again for the Far West Network, but am still not sure if there will be any role for me there or not. I have had some requests to come visit in some of the more remote areas. This is definitely not the season for traveling, and unfortunately I still don't know if/when my health will be up to that kind of situation. I'm continuing to look for what doors will open and plugging away with the local group here.
