In the middle of January, I sent out a newsletter concerning a decision that my team, missions coach, and I would be making at the end of this month. As a quick recap, we would be deciding whether to begin drawing a full salary now or to wait. This is a necessary step, because I will need to present several months' worth of pay stubs when I apply for my visa, and I am hoping to depart in the spring. We were concerned that I may not have enough funds in my outgoing funds to make this a wise decision at the current time. Therefore, I sent out the newsletter, and my team decided to revisit the discussion at the end of the month.

After sending that newsletter, I had several people and a church who generously gave one-time gifts. Another church decided to change from giving monthly to giving annually, and they gave in January. This, along with the steady support of my committed financial partners, has increased my outgoing funds. Even though my outgoing funds are still low, it was decided that I will begin drawing a full salary in February.

I want to thank you so much for your response to that specific newsletter. After sending any newsletter, I always get many follow-up emails or texts asking questions or assuring me that they are praying. It was especially so after that newsletter. God is providing finances, direction, and peace. Thank you for praying for these things.

If you are interested in joining my committed financial partnership team or in making a one-time financial gift, then hit the button below. If 29 new people giving $75 monthly or 43 new people giving $50 monthly joined my team, I'd be at 100% monthly support.

Give a Financial Gift

A couple of my Bible school friends and I were able to see one another while we were all in Michigan. It was exciting to spend the time over countless cups of tea hearing about how God has been providing, leading, and growing each of us in our journeys towards the missions' fields. We played several games. Here, we're playing a German game called That's Pretty Clever (Ganz Schön Clever). It has been a hit with everyone I've played it with.

The last half of January has been quite the miserable time for me. The winter cold always causes my arthritis joint pain to flare up. The arthritis medication that I rely on the most is a monthly infusion. It was denied by my insurance; it will be figured out, but it's taking a while. Currently, I am a full two weeks past my last infusion due date. I find that I am fatigued and easily irritated. If I'm not careful, I can take my frustrations out on the people around me or I can start crying at the drop of a hat. Thankfully my family is very, very patient!

Please pray:

- that I will be able to receive my infusion medication soon, and that it will begin taking effect soon. Pray more that I will have self-control when it comes to my attitude through the pain. Just because I don't feel well, doesn't mean I get a free pass on treating others poorly.

- that I would handle the Word in truth as I put together lessons for the youth group. This month, I'll be teaching twice.
- that I will trust in the Lord's timing and provision, and also be content and find joy in it.
- that my support will continue to increase each month.
