Good morning!We are still in June and we already have a tropical storm heading our way, which may become a hurricane by the time it gets to us.*Here is the report from the U.S. National Hurricane Center:

Tropical Storm Beryl formed Friday evening in the Atlantic east of the Windward Islands and could become Hurricane Beryl by Sunday as it moves westward, the National Hurricane Center said.

It becomes the second named storm of the 2024 Atlantic hurricane season, formally turning into a tropical storm about 1,100 miles southeast of the Windward Islands at the eastern end of the Caribbean.

At this time, is it headed right for us. We had graduation scheduled for Tuesday, the 2nd of July, but it looks like that will probably be postponed.So we're collecting water and sending out emails while we still have electricity. :-)*You will likely hear more about this in a week or so, as it will likely be approaching Florida.*In Grenada,
Reuben & Susan Mains
